We ALL want our kids to be prepared for the “real world” but often get bogged down with the day-to-day discipline, schedules, and mini-crises. When your tween or teen says, “You treat me like a kid,” you want to reply, “That’s because you’re acting like one!”

But what if, every day, you are secretly sabotaging your child’s future success? Would you be willing to change? What would it take?

In this workshop, we will look at ways to “Parent for the Launch.” Using Parenting for the Launch, by Dennis Trittin and Arlyn Lawrence, we’ll discuss ways to:

- Build leadership qualities
- Prepare our kids for decision-making
- Affirm their personal value and uniqueness
- Recruit positive third party voices
- Move from the driver’s seat to the passenger seat

Regardless of the ages of your children, it’s never too soon to start Parenting for the Launch! We hope you’ll join us and invite some friends!
